Latin America’s Changing Geopolitics: Challenges and Dilemmas

with

Juan Gabriel Tokatlian
Universidad di Tella (Buenos Aires)

An assessment of the current situation in the region with particular emphasis on the levels of regional integration/fragmentation; the major concerns and threats in the area (drug trafficking, organized crime, arms build up, among others); the relevance of the presence of Brazil as an emerging power in the region; and the scope of US-Latin American relations and the growing presence in the area of extra-regional, powerful actors.

Juan Gabriel Tokatlian (Argentina) is Professor of International Relations at Universidad Di Tella (Buenos Aires). Tokatlian is a renowned analyst and expert on Latin American geopolitics, drug trafficking and Colombia. He lived for 18 years in Colombia, where he was co-founder and director (1987-94) of the Centro de Estudios Internacionales (CEI) at Universidad de los Andes (Bogotá). He has published extensively, both books and articles, on Colombian and Argentine foreign policies; on US-Latin American relations; on drug trafficking, organized violence and terrorism in the Americas; and on global politics and dynamics. His most recent books are:
- La guerra contra las drogas en el mundo andino (Buenos Aires: Editorial del Zorzal, 2009)
- Hacia una nueva estrategia internacional: El desafío de Néstor Kirchner (Buenos Aires: Editorial Norma, 2004)
